

Alumni - Claire Belcher

Last week we shared part of the story of Lenny Unsworth - one of the first pupils through the doors of Kenilworth School in its current form and we will have 2 more installments chronicling his time at Kenilworth and what he did after school. This week Clare Bletcher, has embraced the entrepreneurial talents that a lot of our former students possess and is now a self employed nail technician . Clare studied English Language, Sociology and Psychology and left the Sixth Form back in 2013.

Claire trained at college and is a qualified nail technician and is taking a course in semi permanent eyelashes - which the students say are brilliant for a night out and also over the holidays. Claire has been working since she left college to take a break to give birth to her beautiful daughter Luna Rose, in October 2015. Claire has bought a house in Coventry with her partner and is now back working full time.

We are also going to use this section of the newsletter to track down former staff and students so please email k.parsons@ksnadmin.ksn.org.uk , if you are trying to track down a former class mate or a teacher.

A student is trying to find out what has happened to a teacher, Mr Tiernan, who taught Maths at Kenilworth during the 1990s. She wants to thank him for his hard work with her and explain to him how he was an inspiration to her. If anyone knows what he has been doing since leaving the school please tell us.
