

Alumini

In our latest alumni we are featuring Rhiannon McGlade – she had a successful career at Kenilworth School achieving very highly at both GCSE and A level as well as being a key member of many sports teams.

Rhiannon went to Sheffield University where she studied Hispanic Studies and Catalan Philology, as well as working hard at her studies she played lots of sport and was club captain of the University Hockey Club. Rhiannon then went to Birmingham University and here she studied for a Masters in International Studies and Diplomacy, and was club captain of the football club. Rhiannon returned to Sheffield University to study for a PhD in Political Cartoons in Catalonia.

Rhiannon then went on to work at Sheffield University, University College London and Queen Mary College, London lecturing in Hispanic studies at all three universities. She has just had a book published: Catalan Cartoons: a cultural and political history and is now living in London. Although Rhiannon feels her academic career sounds a bit dull, because of the nature of her academic field of interest, she does get to travel to Spanish speaking nations very often, which she feels is a real perk of the job!
